

CAREER OF WOMAN EXPLORER PRAISED

Harriet Chalmers Adams' Achievements Recalled by Geographers.

In memory of its first president, the late Harriet Chalmers Adams, the Society of Woman Geographers has just published a special bulletin in which high tribute is paid the noted explorer by founders of the society, officials of the National Geographic Society and others.

The memorial bulletin also carries an announcement by Helen M. Strong, treasurer of the society, that the Executive Council has voted to name an endowment fund to carry on research projects of the Harriet Chalmers Adams Memorial Endowment. Excerpts from some of the pages of tribute in the publication follow:

Blair Niles of New York, one of the founders of the society: "In Haiti, Mexico, Central and South America she blazed the way which others later followed. In the Orient this was equally true; from Siberia to Sumatra and to the Philippine Islands. In her study of the Spanish conquistadores, she visited every country where the flag of Spain ever flew, while the diversity of her interests took her also to North Africa, Ethiopia, the Near East, Greece and the Balkans.

Society a Living Memorial. "Our society, created through her efforts, is a living, human memorial to her. We can best honor her by following the vision for it which she carried in her heart and for which she made so great a sacrifice." Gertrude Emerson Sen of Alameda, Ind., also a founder: "Perhaps, now that Harriet Adams has complete freedom from the restraints and illnesses of the body, her eager inquiring spirit will now and then poise on shining wings about us all; subject no longer to any change, beyond any suffering. Now we may be aware of her as eternally present. And in that quiet awareness nothing can separate us from our memories of her, or from her presence."

Marguerite Harrison of Hollywood, Calif., also a founder: "Physical limitations never shut out Harriet's view of the far horizon; she was always planning and looking out, not in."

Charged With Task. Mary Vaux Walcott, president of the society: "It is for those of us who come after to maintain the standards of professional and intellectual integrity upon which Harriet Chalmers Adams insisted. It is our task to pass on, undimmed, the bright torch of achievement which she left burning."

Gilbert Grosvenor, president of the National Geographic Society: "Harriet Chalmers Adams was one of the rare women of culture and of a background of comfortable living, who enjoyed hard travel and venturing into remote places where few American women had been. She was a most kindly and sincere person, an indefatigable student, an accurate observer, and of dauntless courage and persistence. She always told of the finer traits and aspirations of the people she visited."

John Oliver La Gorce, vice president of the National Geographic Society: "True daughter of a pioneer California gold prospector and mining engineer, Harriet Chalmers Adams inherited the urge to seek and find that mysterious something which lies beyond the seven seas, the snow-capped mountains, and the arid deserts of the world."

The bulletin also carries several pictures of Mrs. Adams, one showing her as she presented the first medal awarded by the society to Amelia Earhart.

Corrective Clinic For Speech Ills Is Held at A. U.

Student Sufferers Treated—Helped One to Raise Grades.

Students at American University suffering from stammering, cleft palate, nasality, lisp, hoarse voice, falsetto and other cognate defects are being treated in a corrective speech clinic sponsored by the university speech department.

In one instance a student, hindered by a cleft palate, has raised his grades from F to C because of new speech instruction. In another all traces of stammering have disappeared.

The speech clinic is under the direction of Richard Hutcheson, who studied with the internationally known speech correctionist, Dr. F. V. Martin of Bristol, R. I.
